Rotten Tomatoes

Movie tickets are expensive. Want to know if a movie is good before you watch it? Rotten Tomatoes has your back. Rotten Tomatoes aggregate reviews, categorizes them as positive or negative, and then averages them. The result is a simple, unbiased appraisal of the odds that you'll like the movie. The results aren't always perfect (they gave heretically low scores to The Prestige and O Brother Where Art Thou), but they are the best out there.

IMDb

Literally one of the oldest websites on the internet (it predates the web browser), IMDb is one of those exhaustive, meticulous collections of movie ratings, facts, and trivia that would take decades to replicate.

Reddit

Reddit is one of the most diverse media sites on the web, with content ranging from the serious to the absurd. It's also a great source of news, both locally and internationally. By controlling your subreddit subscriptions, you can access a steady stream of feeds of just the stuff you're interested in.

Quartz

Quartz is home to some of the most intelligent and thought-provoking journalism you can access online. Its global-centric approach offers stories you're unlikely to find anywhere else. And its understanding of the online world makes Quartz a beautiful site to visit, knowing you'll always come away more informed than when you arrived.

IFTTT

IFTTT (If this, then that) is an increasingly powerful automations platform. From a single account, you can start to connect hundreds of services and apps that you rely on. Once connected, you can create "recipes" that automate certain tasks, so you no longer have to do them manually. For example, you could have IFTTT automatically save email attachments to Google Drive. You could automatically publish your Instagram posts as a Tweet. You can even get an SMS alert to remind you when an event is due to start on Google Calendar.

Imgur   or Flickr

Think of Imgur as a slimmed-down Pinterest. Originally developed as a photo-host for Reddit, Imgur has since bloomed into a great image-sharing platform in its own right.

Yelp

A local review site, Yelp lets you check what's good in your area, and leave reviews if you have a good (or bad) experience.
